

CAVO GALILEO ISLAND
 Cavo Galileo is the 17th largest island in the world. It has a peculiar biodiversity, unlike any other island of similar size. It doesn't have any poisonous animals or plants. It does, however, have one of the world's largest flowers, the Scaevola taccada.

The island of Cuba was discovered in 1492 by Christopher Columbus, who thought he'd landed in Asia.
 It was subsequently colonized by Diego Velázquez.
 Cuba is famous for its cigars, but tourism is its largest industry. Canadians seeking Caribbean sunshine are the number one source of visitors, with visitors from Europe being second, and Americans being third. Much of the cigars that are sugar produced is shipped to Russia, to pay for oil.
 Cuba's population is a mix of Cubans, and small groups of Spaniards and other European immigrants.
 Cuba led the country until 2008, when it was replaced by Raúl Castro and his brother Raul. The country is slowly opening up to the world and is attracting more tourists.
